A. The long, stiff hairs that grow
from the sides of a cat's face are often called whiskers. The whiskers are attached to nerves in the skin, and are sensitive to touch. They help the cat to feel its way around in the dark, and warn it of objects in its path as it prowls about at night in search of mice and other prey. The cat doesn't use its whiskers to measure the space through which it can walk, as some people like to believe. If the whiskers were used for this purpose, there would not be so many cats getting stuck in drainpipes and other tight places!
